PREP SCHOOL LADS HAVE THEIR PRICE

University Men Make Big Mistake in Offering Inducements to Athletic Stars.

EVEN MONEY PAID TO SOME

the "Evening Post" says: There exists in foot ball today a situation which if left unchecked by our leading universities is going to endanger sooner or later the very existence of the game. These boys quite calmly accept as a fact that preparatory school stars have their price. and discuss, as though it were the most ordinary state of affairs, a condition chiefly marked in the attitude of preparatery school players who apparently have come to view foot ball not so much as a game as an opportunity of one sort. or another. Many preparatory achoel players have come to believe they have a price and are concerned only in making the most of their good fortune. What is that price?

This question is difficult to answer because the facts, it is probable, could be obtained only through testimony given under oath in a court of law. Probably there are various sorts of prices, with the coin of the realm not an insignificant unit on the list of inducements. When a coach of a small college team is quoted as going about bragging that the eleven cost him so many thousand dollars, the previous season, what is the inference? This is the time for plain speaking. particularly on the part of any man who loves the great autumn game of foot ball better than any sport that exists. The time for remedial action is now; later the time for action may have passed. At Yale, for example, there exists what is beginning to amount to positive antagunlim to foot ball on the part of professors, a feeling solely due to the attitude of underclass foot ball men toward their class room work; men who came to Yale from various schools with their chests out, filled with the belief that the university owes them immunity from all the essential work of the university. They are not particular to Yale, it might be remarked parenthetically. Fortunately for the sport at Yale, the foot ball authorities have grappled this situation with fron hands. They were moved to this not alone because only eleven of last year's powerful freshman squad of forty-seven came to New Haven as sophomores this year, with scholastic standing sufficiently high to enable them to play foot ball, but because of the attitude of these boys who swelled around the university, with manner suggesting willingness to let the coaches do the worrying for them. But they found the coaches this year were not of a mind to help them with their professors, or to intercede for them in any way. Neither was their presence about the foot ball quarters tolerated.

Follow Ell's Example. They are going about New Haven to day with dazed faces, and when the faculty enacts the proposed rule depriving them of the numerals they won last year it may be imagined their emotions will be even more unsettled. When every sent of learning fellows Tale's example in this respect one phase of the present situation will be ameliorated. But there are other phases. The followeptember 23, is taken from the Boston

Now, if a Yale alumnus or Yale alumni were really bidding for Whalen's zervices, basing judgment upon the present temper at New Haven, it is safe to say the graduates were working solein of their own initiative and without the knowledge of the football authorities. And if, as stated in the foregoing excerpt, a Dartmouth alumnus finally won out, it would be interesting and valuable and righteous for Dartmoptis university to ascertain the grounds upon which this victory was won, and to make the findings public. Universities, under present conditions, are not responsible for actions of over-enthusiastic alumni. but it is high time that the various institutions of our country took action of a nature designed to impress their graduates that they have come to regard themselves as responsible, and that ideals which alumni were supposed to have accepted with their diplomas will here-
